Editor's Introduction

On behalf of the entire editorial team, I am thrilled to present the 2019 winter issue of Philosophia Christi. It is a delight to see such excellent papers, notes, and reviews on wide-ranging areas such as divine aseity and conceptualism, human rebellion against God as a global hermeneutic, the loss and recovery of moral knowledge, open theism, Molinism, the metaphysics of sanctification, political philosophy, Christology and the metaphysics of gender, religious epistemology, and more. The diversity of topics included in this issue clearly showcases the broad range of philosophical interests among the members of the Evangelical Philosophical Society and the Christian philosophical community at large. I want to extend a special thanks to the editorial team (Betty Talbert, Gary Hartenburg, and Joe Gorra) as well as the area book review editors (Mike Austin, Brandon Rickabaugh, and W. Paul Franks) for their excellent work in helping produce such a solid and well-rounded winter issue. Enjoy!
